A SONG OF DAYS.

Trust not to Joy! the rose of June When opened wide will wither soon; Italian days without twilight Will turn them suddenly to night.
Joy, most changeful of all things, Flits away on rainbow wings;
And, when they look the gayest, know It is that they are spread to go!
Mrs. Browning's Early Poems.

of Venice, and, as we sat, two or three supernumeraries: who were scarcely constantly in the line of sight, the President said, "I wonder red-legged, pigeon-toed chaps don't that they are playing this play? There are readful numerous." Just before the top went up each time, he consulted his name and said, "This is Act two, eyes Act eye V," as the case might be. A gent honie, he said, "It was a good piece

Another actor who gave Lincoln great credit was Hackett, in his part of "Falstaff." With his usual desire to signify his sense of obligation, he wrote a little note to the actor, expressing his appreciation at witnessing his performance. Hackett, in reply, sent a book of some poems, perhaps it was one of his own authorship. He also wrote several notes to the president. One night, quite late, when the

 was a mere matter of course that the king of modern Italy should be buried with every imaginable pomp and in the heart of his country. It is said that Emmanuel himself, as well as many of his family, would have preferred the king should rest somewhere among the well-known hills of Piedmont. But he has had a sort of right to insist on a more public funeral, and the accepted, and the "Prince" insisted on paying 400 shekels of silver for the land and the field, which "were made sure" for a possession of a burying place for ever. It was to this tomb that the bones of Jacob were taken with great pomp and ceremony all the way from the land of Egypt. With the same anxiety shown by the others, the patriarch had charged him to bury him in the foreign country.

...overlords of Egypt, as they are in the of whom we have authenticated re-were also the most scrupulous and exact ment in the choice of their sepulchres. immense masses of the pyramids were up as a preparation for the day of
; and although we know not yet what the actual ceremonies accompanying interment; it is fair to suppose that they were not unworthy of the place ex-n. It took 50,000 men as much a

With the very commencement of the year the rage for gorgeous funerals had broken out with all its wonted violence. The "Scourge of God," when he suddenly in the prime of life in his palace on the Danube, "His body solemnly exposed in the midst of the play in a silken pavilion, and the chosen guests of the banquet, in measured and luxurious, chanted a funeral song to the glory of the hero." According to their custom the barbarians cut off a part of his hair and mangled their faces with wounds. The remains of Attila were carried to the city, and the king and privately buried under the sign of the cross. The bones of the king and of nations were thrown into the graves, captives who had opened the ground infernally massacred, and the marauding hordes of the Goths, Vandals, and Franks, all propitiated by the slaughter of enemies and the blood of the slain. "The death of Attila," says the poet, "is the death of Hyppathia," in which the death of Attila is followed by a promiscuous massacre of the Goths and the Egyptians by his Gothic commander, Araricus, Graphic.

Warblers—even of the charcoal-colored variety. While to this lamentable error may be ascribed, as their primary cause, the sun's rays, which, in the absence of the forest canopy, are at least culminated in fumes, and in their extent as they are hopeless of instead of handsome and valuable, multiplying the hill sides and varying the monotony of the plains: affording the man and beast, and providing nutritious food for the ground—one of Nature's best proof of the truth that the Useful and the Beautiful are one—there is not the least vestige of the forest left. The trees, which have been cut down and used as fuel for all the domestic uses, are reduced into uselessness of the land."

The process and effects of deforestation may be briefly described. In the first place, the hills, where the tiny rivulets first take into life, but where the trees are few, are the first to be denuded. Then, as the hillsides are cut down and the rivulets into roaring torrents, and the nature clothing the slopes is lost, in ample measure of wood and herbage is annihilated. roots grow in close embrace and necessary for their own existence; are held in bondage the dislocated rocks and boulders which would otherwise descend the watercourses below. The leaves and branches of the trees break the soil from the main trunk, and the soil from the branches as they shield it from the washing away; they shield it from the denuding rays of the sun, and also min, to every blast of the storm. The earth, the matted roots, the tender undergrowth, decay, crumble, melt; and, as one by one, the bonds which held it together, loosen, the hill literally topples and falls. The integrating action of alternate rain and frost, which there is now nothing to interfere with, comes into full play; the soil is washed away, becomes silt, the rocks split, crumble, disintegrate; landslides occur. Down the steep, hundreds of tons of hill-side into torrential rivers.

the river loses its capacity for navigation, and many times the area of ground is lost to the country, than the measure of the ecological rift through which it anciently flowed. Should, however, the ground be undervalued and valuable, and should the investment in the district affected be sufficient; then, at great cost of labour, the construction of artificial banks is resorted to, these banks to be continually repaired and regularly raised for, year by year.

But this is only one of the less-clearing of timber from gorges. The rain storm, deluging the bare hill, runs off more formerly; the trees, undergoing huge—and the soil which sustains and which their roots hold together longer to retain their present rainfall; from both these causes the flood waters are discharged in volume; and, unless successful

These are the effects of dis-hills. In the plains, the work been done before, though be-understood to refer mainly to a happy chance, the religious and we are also glad to believe love of the Beautiful, have p-almost universally groves and which generally, but not always to an image or a shrine; even even single large trees, remain

There are not a few. A heavy tax upon his labour to keep his banks; continual loss of his encroachments on the fields; devastation by floods, alternating tithes from want of supply to the streams; deprivation of leaf-mould for his ground, of shade and beasts. He feels the want of firing material; the game the for-is driven away; mast, acorns, and other forest fruits no longer support food for himself or his pigs; and an inconsiderable deprivation—the Japanese—no longer does the tender green of the foliage of spruce, grand, rostral masses of the spruce or the brilliant, changeful tints give their welcome beauty to the nothing relieves the pitiless glare, the monotonous expanse of stony plain; and one chief component of Life has gone from him for ever.
